2. Behavioral Analysis

⚠ The subject demonstrates a pattern of geographic instability with 20+ addresses across Minnesota over the past 15 years, suggesting potential housing insecurity or deliberate transience. Her criminal history shows escalation from minor offenses (traffic violations, theft) to serious felonies (drug possession, weapons charges, 3rd-degree murder). Financial records indicate persistent economic stress (bankruptcy, liens, vehicle repossessions). The subject appears to maintain connections with family members despite geographic separation, particularly with her mother at whose address she continues to receive mail. Her pattern of vehicle registration followed by loss of vehicles suggests difficulty maintaining financial stability. Recent weapons charges in a courthouse setting (2025) indicate potential disregard for authority and poor judgment.

3. Psychological Profile

⊖ The subject's criminal progression suggests antisocial tendencies and poor impulse control. Her 3rd-degree murder conviction related to controlled substance distribution (2017) indicates involvement in high-risk drug activities. Multiple theft convictions (2009-2023) suggest a pattern of disregard for others' property rights. The 2025 courthouse weapons charge is particularly concerning as it demonstrates a willingness to bring dangerous weapons into secure government facilities despite her felony status. Financial instability (bankruptcy in 2011, multiple liens) likely creates significant psychological stress. Her frequent relocation pattern may indicate attempts to evade law enforcement or creditors. The subject's history of fleeing police (2023 conviction) further suggests resistance to authority and poor decision-making under pressure.

Employment data coverage is limited and absence of records does not indicate the subject has never been employed.

5. Bankruptcies, Liens & Judgments

❌ The subject filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy in December 2008, which was discharged in March 2010, indicating severe financial distress. A civil judgment for $13,385 was filed against her in December 2024 by Flowers Corporation, likely related to an auto loan default. An eviction filing from October 2007 suggests housing instability. These financial issues, spanning over a decade, demonstrate a persistent pattern of financial mismanagement and inability to meet financial obligations.

12. Final Thoughts

🚫 Jane Doe presents as a high-risk individual with an escalating criminal history, including violent offenses, weapons charges, and drug distribution. Her pattern of behavior suggests increasing disregard for legal consequences and potential for unpredictable actions. Her financial instability and transient lifestyle make her movements difficult to predict, though she maintains connections to family members, particularly her mother.

The subject's recent felony weapons charge (2025) is especially concerning as it demonstrates willingness to carry weapons despite her prohibited status as a felon. Her history of fleeing police indicates she may attempt to evade law enforcement contact. The 3rd-degree murder conviction related to drug distribution suggests connections to drug networks that may still be active.

Investigators should approach with extreme caution, considering her history of weapons possession and resistance to authority. Surveillance of family addresses, particularly her mother's residence, may provide the most reliable monitoring points. Court records should be regularly checked for upcoming appearances related to her current charges, which provide predictable opportunities for contact. Her apparent lack of stable employment and housing suggests she may be engaged in unreported income-generating activities that warrant further investigation.
